Tips for Communicating with People who are Hard of Hearing and Late-Deafened

The United Methodist Committee on Deaf and Hard of Hearing Ministries is a Global Ministries committee. The committee provides resources, consultation, cultivates Deaf ministries, educates congregations, helps to develop Deaf leaders, and offers grants to United Methodist churches. Helpful to know is when reading a capital 'D' in the word deaf, it indicates cultural deafness within what is discussed or stated. Besides indicating hearing loss, the small 'd' in deaf indicates someone who is not culturally Deaf.

Hard of Hearing and Late-Deafened

The term hard of hearing refers to people who can understand spoken speech with the help of amplified sound through an assisted listening device, a hearing aid, or by lip-reading. Persons may be born hard of hearing or lose their hearing later in life. Some learn sign language and are a part of the Deaf community, while some do not.

The term late-deafened refers to people who became deaf post-lingually (after learning to speak), and were raised in the hearing community. Most late-deafened people do not learn sign language, while some will.

When referring to Deaf people, simply say Deaf and hard of hearing, as "hearing impaired" is often considered a negative label.

Communication Tips

People who are hard of hearing or late-deafened may use a variety of methods to communicate. Most use speech and lip-reading, some use sign language, while others write, use technology, or use a combination of these. It is always best to ask the individual what is the most effective means of communication. Most will appreciate the effort when asked instead of assuming. Remember, not all hard of hearing and late-deafened individuals have the same needs.

The following are some points to keep in mind.

- Communication is usually better in a quiet environment with few distractions and little to no background noise.
- Make sure the area where you are speaking is well lit. Avoid standing with the window or light source behind you.
- Always get the person's attention before you speak and face the listener when possible.
- Try to pronounce your words clearly. Try not to exaggerate your lip movements. Speak naturally.
- Make sure your mouth and face is visible. Do not cover your mouth when speaking.
- Consider using facial expressions and gestures to help clarify your message.
- Rephrase your message if the person does not understand what was said.
- Do not assume the person can hear and understand you if he or she is wearing a hearing aid. The hearing aid may be used for environmental sounds.
- Typing back and forth on a cell phone or pager may be a way to get a point across. Or consider downloading a dictation app.

Church Considerations

The following are some accessibility considerations for churches.

- Have printed materials available for meetings and Bible study.
- If needed, offer the sermon and worship notes to supplement communication access.
- Some may prefer to sit in the front pew. Ask before reserving the pew.
- The room should be free of background noise. If a microphone is unavailable in a meeting, repeat the question before answering it.
- Have good quality sound systems. Use it consistently.
- Have assistive listening devices available.
- Have a sign language interpreter and/or Communication Access Real Time Translation (CART) or Computer Assisted Notetaking (CAN) available.
- Dimming the lights may make it difficult for speech reading or to follow what is going on (like at a Christmas Eve service).
- Make sure the area is well lit.
- Captioning, such as Communication Access Real Time Translation (CART) or Computer Assisted Notetaking (CAN) can be displayed on a computer or a screen.
- Only recruit an interpreter if requested.
- When advertising church events or special services, provide contact information for participants to request accommodations.
- Consider offering a sign language class.
